Camille Sellers, a dance performance and choreography major here at USC, is a three-year resident of Preston Residential College. She is an active member of the USC Dance Company, and is in the process of creating her first piece of original choreography to be performed at the end of November. Camille’s hope is to dance in a professional company of some sort and create her own choreography. Not only does she practice and rehearse every day for her dancing, but she is an advocate for breast cancer awareness. Camille shares, “A handful of my blood relatives have been personally affected by different forms of cancer so it really hits home.

My father is the youngest of seven and all three of his sisters have had breast cancer. Unfortunately, when I was only three-years-old my Aunt Patsy succumbed to the terrible disease. I’ve been raising funds for the past four years in memory of my Aunt Patsy, but also in honor of my Aunt Joyce & Margaret, whom are breast cancer survivors. There is a very high chance that my sister and I could end up getting breast cancer, but I know that research is beneficial and worth every penny. I’m not going to stop telling my story and spreading the word. There are two parts to raising funds for cancer: awareness and research. My goal is to do both at the same time. Fundraising for Breast Cancer Research will take place all month long, but on Friday, October 26th we will spread awareness by wearing pink together. So, don’t forget to wear your pink on Friday, October 26.”
