 - “Hubbard, during his ABA presidency in 2014-15, chose to take on what probably is the most controversial issue facing the legal profession: how to leverage technology and nonlawyer help to make the justice system accessible to the 80 percent of the population that can’t afford it.”¹
 - “In pursuing the interests of consumers as users of the legal system, he is bold and unafraid to court controversy and gone where others fear to go,’ says commission member James Sandman, president of the Legal Services Corp. ‘That’s quite unusual, particularly from someone leading a bar association.”²
 - “‘He opened the door and created a discussion,’ says [Richard] Granat. ‘That door can’t now be closed.’”³
